

Project Managment – Ian Perez Bunuel

The project management was split very evenly between all members so it's hard to pinpoint an area that I specifically did / came up with. Because of this I will name the things I took part in to manage the project.

Throughout the project the management of it was split evenly between all members. Parts of project management we did, and I took part in were making a Milanote board to keep track of progress and have goals for each week. Creating this Milanote board was something that we all mutually agreed on being a good idea and I used it whenever I had a new idea / had work done.

As a group we also met, mostly on Mondays, to check our progress and what we should have done by the end of next week. In addition to this we had a discord group chat where we discussed the project and updated everyone when we pushed something new to master or if we started working on something new.